OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Markets were exciting in January, as the public battle over a small set of stocks that have been popular targets of short sellers helped fuel a rise in volatility and saw the S&P 500 experience its worst decline in three months. While this makes for good headlines, we think it's a relatively isolated incident and there are more fundamental issues shaping our views. Earnings season supports the recovery narrative, with over 80% of companies reporting beating expectations. Meanwhile, the Federal Reserve used its January meeting to assure investors of their long-term plan for easy monetary policy and low rates, despite rising speculation that their bond purchase program may begin to taper and rates move off the zero bound earlier than expected. Finally, President Biden appears determined to push through a large fiscal package regardless of lackluster support from moderate Republicans. All this is to say, our base case of lower rates for longer and a continued economic recovery aided by easy monetary and fiscal policy remains in place. The pick-up in volatility highlights the need to be measured in adding risk to portfolios, but we still feel the risk/reward of owning stocks and riskier parts of the fixed income markets is justified, albeit less so than last year given the rebound in prices

Fund Performance. The Fund returned 0.00% for the month and year-to-date return amounted to 0.00%.

Fund Strategy. We are selectively taking profits in areas with lower yields and less upside potential. We continue to see opportunities in dividend stocks and areas of higher yielding credit fixed income and are putting cash to work. That said, the fund's positioning did not change meaningfully over the month and we maintain our moderately pro-risk stance.
