OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. On the surface, May was a relatively benign month for markets but a closer look under the hood reveals a much choppier environment. The release of April's elevated U.S. inflation print prompted fears of overheating and Fed tightening. Minutes from the most recent Fed meeting also suggested several FOMC members are now talking about tapering. Surprisingly, longer-term treasury yields were mostly unchanged. This may suggest bond markets have priced in, at least partially, higher expected inflation. Elsewhere, cyclical stocks again outperformed growth stocks while high yield bonds posted the eighth consecutive month of positive performance, underscoring our view on the space as a relatively consistent income and return driver in the current backdrop. We maintained our positioning during the month, preferring stocks and credit over higher quality fixed income. Additionally, we modestly reduced cash in favour of high yield bonds. Key contributors to portfolio income this month were high yield bonds, covered calls, and global ex-US developed equities. Global ex-US developed and emerging market equities, and US equity positions were the largest contributors to total return this month, offset by negative returns in covered calls, currency and duration management positions.

Fund Performance. The Fund returned 0.00% for the month and year-to-date return amounted to 1.02%.

Fund Strategy. The strength of the reopening momentum in the U.S. coupled with supply chain bottlenecks means higher inflation may be with us for some time. Similar to April's report, the May inflation print released June 10th showed that more volatile components of inflation – like airfares and used cars – again drove the bulk of the increase. However, we also saw a second consecutive jump in more stable 'core goods' and a small bump in owner's equivalent rent, a measure of the rent homeowners would charge for their homes. Rents will likely take some time to filter through the reopening process, so we'll be watching this measure over the coming quarters to see how housing costs may impact inflation. We are also seeing signs of higher wage inflation, in part from an inability of companies to fill open jobs. We will be monitoring how this trend develops as more states pull back from additional stimulus benefits.
