OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Global equities posted positive returns in February driven by the increasing pace of vaccine distribution globally, US fiscal stimulus expectations and improving economic data. Developed market equities gained as the pace of the vaccine rollout accelerated while emerging markets underperformed the broad global equity index on the back of a stronger dollar and inflationary concerns.

During the month, US House of Representatives passed President Joe Biden's USD 1.9 trillion stimulus package, which included additional stimulus checks and unemployment benefits. The Biden administration seeks to have the bill signed before existing benefits expire in March. In terms of monetary policy, the Federal Reserve kept rates unchanged and Fed Chair Jerome Powell reiterated the bank's accommodative policy to support the economy and affirmed that supportive measures won't be pulled back anytime soon. Fed Chair Powell also downplayed inflation concerns and assured that the recent rise in bond yields is driven by a robust economic outlook.

Economic data continued to show signs that the recovery remains on track. US business activities expanded for the ninth month in a row, driven by the strength in the manufacturing and services sector. The labor market benefitted from the pickup in economic activity and beat expectations as nonfarm payrolls increased by 379,000 and unemployment rate declined to 6.2% for the month. US consumer confidence also rose to a three-month high supported by declining coronavirus cases and the pace of the vaccine distribution.

Fund Performance. The fund returned 1.74%, lagging the benchmark by 71 basis points. Allocations in China and Emerging Market equities detracted from performance.

Fund Strategy. The COVID-19 pandemic will likely continue to cause volatility and market uncertainty as investors weigh the potential negative consequences to global growth and trade. While there are signs of a recovery in some economic indicators and vaccine deployment under way, we remain cautiously optimistic on global equities. Overall, we have a bias towards high quality companies with healthy free cash flow ratios, strong growth and attractive shareholder returns. From a sector perspective, we continue to like Technology and Health Care due to its positive growth prospects and structural changes brought about by the pandemic, while investing in Real Estate due to its cyclical nature. Finally, we like EM assets as we expect President-elect Joe Biden to be less combative in his administration's foreign policy, especially towards China, and as we see positive news on vaccine deployment.
