OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Global equities declined in September as investors adopted a risk-off sentiment over concerns on the path of economic recovery. Sentiment was driven by the Federal Reserve's hawkish shift, inflation concerns, and the energy crisis across Europe and other markets. Investor confidence likewise declined due to fears of contagion as Chinese property giant Evergrande missed interest payments and as Chinese government regulators continued their crackdown on the technology sector.

The Federal Reserve kept rates steady and continued the current pace of asset purchases. Fed Chairman Jerome Powell said that it is closer to achieving its inflation and employment goals and announced that the pace of asset purchases could taper starting November until mid-2022 as long as the recovery remains on track. Regarding fiscal policy, the US Congress continues to debate over the size of the 2022 budget reconciliation bill, holding back the raising of the debt ceiling. Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen called for a raise or a suspension of the US debt ceiling, warning that the US Treasury could run out of cash by October 18 and default on its obligations if the debt limit isn't raised.

In commodity markets, Europe and China are facing an energy crisis as prices surged due to a shortage in the energy supply. The supply crunch is expected to remain as demand growth strengthens and the cold season starts. Global supply chains remain under pressure, with factories in Europe and China forcing to limit production to conserve energy.

Fund Performance. The fund returned -4.97%, lagging the benchmark by 68 basis points. Stock selection and underweight in Japanese equities detracted from performance.

Fund Strategy. The fund has shifted to a more balanced allocation combining high growth stocks with some cyclical exposure. However, we remain underweight in Energy, Materials and traditional Financials as we foresee better longer term prospects elsewhere. Despite the recent sell-off in Chinese equities driven by domestic regulatory uncertainty and real estate sector woes, we remain optimistic in broader EM stocks due to the vaccine-led economic recovery expected in the near term.
