OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Global equities rebounded in October as investors focused on robust corporate earnings over concerns on inflation and the path of economic recovery. Markets reached new highs driven by the sentiment over the solid earnings season, but price pressures remained as supply and energy shortages continue to weigh on manufacturing and production. The Federal Reserve kept rates steady and maintained the current pace of asset purchases, reiterating that tapering can begin as early as mid-November or December until mid-2022. The committee also raised the inflation outlook but believed that elevated inflation is transitory. In terms of fiscal policy, the US House of Representatives approved a short-term increase in the debt ceiling by $480 billion, allowing the US Treasury department to fulfill its obligations until December 3. Global economic data remained mixed, reflecting a slowdown in some regions. Initial jobless claims in the US dropped and continued a downward trend while business activity slowed in the Eurozone and China, driven by rising costs due to power shortages and rising commodity prices. Eurozone's composite PMI decreased from 56.2 to 54.3 while China's manufacturing PMI declined to 49.2, signaling a contraction in the manufacturing sector. In commodity markets, coal, crude, and natural gas prices continued to surge to multi-year highs as demand increased due to reopening economies and the incoming winter season. Global supply chains remain under pressure and may worsen as the energy shortage hampers production. The MSCI World Health Care Index returned 4.22% over the month. Health care services and biopharma large-cap were the top performing sectors, while biopharma mid-cap and medical technology were the bottom performing sectors for the month.

Fund Performance: The fund returned 2.31% in October, lagging the benchmark by 191 basis points. Sector allocation detracted from performance.

Fund Strategy. We expect the human and economic impact of COVID-19 to remain challenging but we are optimistic with the rollout of effective vaccines underway. Questions remain around the exact role boosters will play in the fight against COVID-19, but we do anticipate approval of a 3rd shot in a broad patient population. We are also encouraged by the report of an efficacious oral antiviral drug, which may reduce the risk of hospitalization and death in patients. The successful development of oral antiviral agents may serve as an important tool in reducing the societal burden of disease, especially in emerging markets where access to vaccines and antibody therapeutics may be limited. Beyond vaccine development, the COVID pandemic highlighted the need for more significant testing infrastructure in developed and emerging markets, which should continue to drive demand within the diagnostics industry. Medical device trends and hospital utilization are improving overall with stronger hospital safety processes in place. The fund will continue to favor companies that develop innovative products designed to address important unmet medical needs. Over the long term, the tailwinds of innovation, an aging population and the globalization of demand cutting-edge Western-style medicines should continue to drive growth for the sector.
