OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Global equity markets gained in October as investors focused on better-than-expected earnings results. Robust labor data and elevated inflation prints supported central banks' continued hawkish stance. The US labor market remained strong as nonfarm payrolls increased by 261,000, beating expectations, while US CPI posted 8.2% year-on-year growth for September. Despite the strong labor data, signs of weakness are beginning to emerge in housing and business activity data, driving optimism that central banks might soon slow down their aggressive rate hikes. US business activity contracted for the fourth straight month in October and US composite PMI declined to 47.3 from 49.5 last month, driven by weaker manufacturing and services sectors. In other parts of the world, Eurozone's factory activity weakened further over the month, the most since May 2020 as record inflation and elevated energy prices weighed on demand. Meanwhile, in China, sentiment deteriorated as President Xi got re-elected for a third term, raising concerns about his authority and China's continued COVID-Zero policy.

Fund Performance. The fund increased by 6.84% in October, lagging its benchmark by 152 basis points. Security selection in medical technology and biopharmaceuticals detracted from performance.

Fund Strategy. Current market valuations, strong fundamentals and robust innovation pipeline leaves us with a more positive outlook for the health care sector. Attractive valuations and breakthrough innovations in the biopharma industry, particularly in oncology and certain rare diseases, are compelling and are creating a rich opportunity set for investors. Outside of biopharma, medical technology companies have numerous opportunities as more attractive medical device categories are poised to accelerate compared to a decade ago, such as new diabetes devices, genetic sequencing and diagnostics. In the medium-term, many firms are expected to grow their addressable market through geographic expansion, new technologies, and new patient populations. The fund will continue to favor companies that develop innovative products designed to address important unmet medical needs. Over the long term, the tailwinds of innovation, an aging population and the globalization of demand cutting-edge Western-style medicines should continue to drive growth for the sector.
