OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Global equities declined in January after a strong finish to 2021. Volatility spiked sharply, triggered by global geopolitical tensions, persistently high inflation, and the prospects of more aggressive tightening of monetary policy. The risk of a further Russian invasion of Ukraine escalated. Meanwhile, the rapid proliferation of the Omicron variant across the globe prompted governments to reinstate restrictions but measures generally remained limited as the economic impact has been less severe than anticipated. Surging energy prices, robust demand, and ongoing supply-chain disruptions continued to push inflation above forecasts in many countries. Global markets were roiled after the US Federal Reserve (Fed) accelerated plans to taper its balance sheet and signaled that interest rates would rise in March and could continue to increase at a quicker pace to bring down inflation. Most global sovereign yields rose markedly, in line with the hawkish tone of major central banks. High yield generated negative total returns as market volatility increased following hawkish comments from central bankers indicating a faster pace of monetary policy tightening. Within EM, local markets debt outperformed external debt, in US-dollar terms.

Fund Performance. The fund declined by 3.66% in January. Within global equities, from a regional perspective, performance was negative across majority of the regions, led by the United States as US equities suffered their largest monthly decline since March 2020, as markets were pressured by the Fed's hawkish policy pivot, persistently high inflation, uncertainty about additional fiscal stimulus and concerns about a potential peak in corporate profit margins. Within global fixed income, performance was also negative across the credit sectors, led by investment grade and high yield credit as spreads widened.

Fund Strategy. While the economic backdrop may not be quite as supportive for the market as it was in 2021, we maintain a pro-risk stance. We entered 2022 with a backdrop of a slowing economy, tightening global monetary policies, and cooling fiscal stimulus. We find ourselves in a mid to late-stage economy and with it, moderate expectations from the markets. We are moderately bullish on global equities and we believe that the recent sell-off and current period of volatility present attractive opportunities. Our expectations for 2022 is one of reflationary growth and we expect COVID concerns to fade, consumer spending to persist, and the economic recovery to continue but with higher inflation and less policy stimulus. On a regional basis, we prefer developed over emerging markets (EM) given China's slowdown and the hardships EM countries face post-pandemic, including slower growth, high inflation, worse fiscal deficits, and greater political volatility. Within fixed income, our view for this year is that the rates market will be choppy and central banks may need to hike sooner and more aggressively than anticipated. We are moderately bearish on government bonds as well as credit and EM Debt, as we think credit valuations are rich, with most spreads well inside of median levels. Finally, we believe this market environment to be supportive of security selection and active management. Against this backdrop, income investors will be best served through a highly diversified portfolio of multi-asset income producing assets that can be dynamically adjusted as market conditions evolve.
