OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. MSCI AC Asia Pacific ex Japan rose during the month. The month began with a continued drawdown in Chinese equities on tariff concerns, a strong USD, and a recovery in US-oriented AI supply chains in Asia. However, these trends reversed at various points throughout the month. China experienced a meaningful recovery mid-month, partly as the U.S softened its tariff stance. The U.S. dollar fluctuated, easing after a December CPI miss and a Bank of Japan rate hike, but strengthening again with new U.S. tariffs on Mexico and Canada. AI sentiment shifted as DeepSeek's R1 model launch influenced investor focus from hardware to software. Korea led the region, recovering from last year's lows, with Industrials outperforming. Taiwan outperformed, buoyed by TSMC's strong results and robust manufacturing momentum. In Australia, strong credit growth trends continued with an acceleration in business. Anticipated interest rate cuts, upcoming tax cuts, and resilient employment continued to support the discretionary sector, while the financials sector continued to move higher despite stretched valuations. Philippines and Malaysia fell along with other ASEAN markets due to elevated US rates and a strong US dollar weighing on the region, as these factors are expected to limit monetary easing in ASEAN countries, with the impact varying based on each country's FX reserves.

Fund Performance. The fund returned 0.45% in January, outperforming the benchmark by a basis point. Stock selection in Korea added to performance.

Fund Strategy. Global growth is steady but slowing and inflation has fallen across the world yet remains at levels consistent with a cautious approach to monetary easing. A volatile approach to tariff implementation only complicates this picture further. With interest rates in developed markets falling, excluding Japan, many central banks started their own rate-cutting cycles, though further progress will likely depend on policy decisions from the US administration. This should support domestic growth, and in some cases lower deposit rates may encourage domestic investors to pivot into domestic equities. While the US dollar has fallen in real terms from multi-decade highs, typically a tailwind for Asian equities, its anticipated downward trajectory is likely to remain volatile. China's economic recovery remains fragmented, with consumer confidence weak amid clear signs of consumers trading down as they digest lower real estate prices, a key store of wealth. Policy action finally seems to be broadening out, but announcements have been incremental so far, disappointing investors. Valuations appear supportive, but earnings revisions remain negative. In contrast to China, prospects in other parts of the Asia Pacific regions appear more encouraging. In India and Indonesia, where valuations have moderated somewhat, their respective governments seem set to continue the policy support of recent years, likely maintaining their respective investment led expansions. North Asian technology companies, possibly due to advances in AI, such as the emergence of DeepSeek, offer more idiosyncratic opportunities in underappreciated areas of the AI supply chain: application specific ICs, liquid cooling, servers, and testing and packaging. With economic data indicating a broadening beyond the US, Asian corporates look increasingly well positioned to benefit from recovery in domestic activity as well as from investment in the materials and manufactured goods needed to support the carbon transition. With a better economic backdrop, we should also expect earnings upgrades by low double digits for 2025.
